TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—The object at which I aimed in my letter under this head appears to have escaped the notice of my critic, your correspondent "Back Blocker." The advantage or otherwise of peddling as against sheepherding sheep, is a matter of small moment beside the subject which I conceived myself to be discussing.

We have maraopalis in the east, rabbits in the west, and both in the centre of the colony threatening to eat us out, and having for my own part secured neither point nor means in an effort to destroy the first-named of these pests on my own land, and having indignominously failed, I sat down discouraged, and took a peep into the past for an explanation of the rapid growth of these noxious creatures, and found ample evidence to support the conclusion that to the destruction of the dingos the plague is due.

I saw the biggest half of this colony, including the very country where your correspondent is located, in its primitive state, and when I now picture the thing to myself, and think of the animals it supported, the truth of the doctrine of the "survival of the fittest" comes home to me. The miserable things did not exist—they could not live for want of food—nor was there any chance for them to become adapted to extinction. The "fittest" of both sides live and flourish as it were, was maintained, little more than sufficient to enable one to say that there were such animals.

In that part of the colony I saw the Wampanoag Indians, and among them I saw some eight hundreds, and thousands, of miles without a single one of the same, and as a further evidence of the scarcity of all animals other than human and feathered, I may say that the aboriginals were without covering of any kind: not the

they disregarded cold, or did not know the value of skins as covering, but they appeared to be unable to get any. Now what is the truth of to-day? Your own special commissioner informs us that he might have knocked kangaroos on the head with a stick as he rode along the banks of this very river. The growth, however, of the poet has not yet well begun either on the Darling or any other watercourse lying beyond it, as compared, at least, with the Upper Bogran, Macquarie, Castlereagh, and all creeks, rivers, and country lying to the north of them, where paddocking has been longest in practice, and where the white man's reclaiming of the dingee was first started. The white is, beyond doubt, the best vermin-killer we have, and I believe on this earth. He is quite as superior if not as fleet, as any tame dog, but his great superiority consists in his education. He was taught to depend upon himself for a living from the day he could crawl. His mother taught him, in addition, all she knew, and she knew all that the man had been given to know by his Maker, and had acquired by long years of experience and self-dependence. I do not see in this creature the work and the wisdom of the great God. If He had neglected this one simple little act of creation, Captain Cook would have found this island swarming with noxious animals, and vermin, and noxious vegetation, and the pastoralist would have found it no fit place to depasture cattle and sheep if, with so great a growth of unwholesomeness, a place for human habitation. Why, then, did the Lord, in His wisdom, create this animal and this on the Lower Springs are this very day, endeavoring to make a substitute for the dingy. Mr. Crozier, one of the largest, most intelligent, and best experienced of our pastoralists, is reported to have imported shipments of our dogs from South Australia, and to have turned them out upon his runs. I have but little hope of these dogs doing much good. They are poor, helpless, untaught, domestic creatures, which

That was dog may be made to exercise everything we have in the shape of a post, I feel quite sure; but then they must be cared for, cultivated, and dressed in their coats; and if they are not, they will grow up pedantic and their tails hang straight. Your correspondent has not, however, quite satisfied me that this is the best method of sheep farming and the cheapest. But I will leave that to the experts, and this letter will men know better than myself. I could cite fifty stories such as against shepherding, that is, modern shepherding, especially in the back country, than the one he has given me. I am sure that the sheep, and this is the case with every body else, can get over the fact that the sheep, unlike other vegetarian animals I know of, is a true domestic creature. I feel sheep at a man, and at our own country, and I am sure that man has a habit, that sheep and all its progeny will retain.

"Little Bo-peep has lost her sheep."
"I will tell where to find them."
"I will then close my eyes and follow them home."
And bring their tails behind them."

Your correspondent succeeded at the latter end of his letter in making a strong point against me. The point is, however, very weakly supported by the fact that the majority of the members of the Land Bill now gulag on in the House. To an inexperienced person his remark conveys the logic of the first water, whilst to one who has seen the House in action it looks like an effort at being thought smart at the expense of expression. He says:—"The last argument that Mr. Kelly used to prove the utility of his plan was that the sheep would be able to find their way out of the enclosed sheep in the matter of being placed in the park and so on will build his own, if not tick up, on the road to the grove and so on." I am not sure that Mr. Kelly's argument was any sounder than the statement that the sheep would find their way out of the enclosed sheep in the matter of being placed in the park and so on will build his own, if not tick up, on the road to the grove and so on.

slaughtered. Now if, as Mr. Kelly says, sheep are bred and discontinued in paddocks, and thrive so much better under the immediate supervision and protection of man, how is it that they lose condition in this way from day to day they are yielded? One would naturally think that, if Mr. Kelly's theory is correct, the reverse would be the case, and that they would begin to improve from the day that they were taken from their unprotected existence in the paddocks and placed under the protective care of man."

We know that an ox will fatten to greater perfection the stall than by leaving him to gather his own grass in the bush; we know also that it wraps a wild buck, and a wild hind, and a wild doe, and a wild roe, and a wild stag, and a wild masher, pumpkin, before him, he will make short work of the mixture, tub included, not with his teeth, but with his horns. This bullock will do half the flesh of his bones before becoming accustomed to his new mode of life, but, in doing this, he will also do half the trouble of a bullock, and will be as amiable. Well, this is just the same thing put in another way. The sheep and consequently goats, sheep, will thrive, while the goat, when brought into close quarters, will starve and fall; this at least it becomes familiar with, its furrier, stings, with its noisy monkey men, and its noisy monkey men, at between the fore and the slaughtering." My remark is that the fore and the slaughtering is the same thing put in another way. The fore and the slaughtering is the same thing put in another way.

squatter is king half his run at a stroke," whilst, sober truth, this gentleman is not having one single leg the land he now holds. But, on the contrary, is being put into firm possession of one-half of it, and allowed to remain a great deal more securely than he at present stands, on the other half. To see this clearly, however, one requires, in the case of the sheep, that a little bit of practical experience

The Sydney Morning Herald.

SATURDAY, JULY 5, 1886.

In the Legislative Assembly yesterday, in the continued absence of Mr. Speaker in consequence of his recent accident, Mr. Cameron acted as Deputy-Speaker, and Mr. L. F. Heydon as Chairman of Committee.

It was announced that the writ for the election of a member for West Macquarie, in the room of Mr. T. H. Kelly, resigned, had been returned endorsed with the name of Mr. L. Lloyd.

Mr. SLATTERY, for Mr. Purves, chairman, brought the report of the select committee on the claim of Mr. Thomas Horton.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a petition from Mr. M^r. Master, praying to be allowed to be heard by counsel before the select committee on the case of Mr. Frank Tobbs.

Three questions were asked by hon. members and answered by Ministers.

The following formal motion was agreed to:—That the report and returns of the Commandant on the petitioners and volunteers be received.

Mr. STUART obtained leave to go into committee on Tuesday next to consider the expediency of bringing a bill to amend the municipal law in relation to the supply of gas by municipal corporations.

Mr. FARNELL having obtained leave to bring in a bill to declare the law relative to additional conditional purchase in certain cases, the bill was brought in and read the first time.

The notice for the reconsideration of the resolution approving of the establishment by the Government of a North Star

The debate on the motion of Mr. Olliffe, that the Licensing Act Amendment Bill be now read the second time, was resumed by Mr. ARNOLD, who opposed the second reading of the bill. He had admitted on the previous night that the Licensing Bill required amendment in many of its minor provisions, but he had never expressed himself in favour of opening the public houses on Sundays, nor of extending the hours of sale of spirits. He went at some length into the history of the bill, and then moved the adjournment of the debate.

tion of the arguments that had been advanced by Mr. Olliffe in favour of the bill, and quoted statistics to show that the consumption of spirits, and consequently intemperance, had decreased since the present law had been in operation. The closing of public-houses on Sundays had been specially productive of good. He proceeded to quote very copiously from official documents in support of his arguments, and attention was very frequently called to the state of the House. At length, at six minutes past 8 o'clock, he said:—“I am, I repeat, a temperate man.”

From a recent issue of the Government Gazette we gather that the appointment of a permanent successor to the late Under-Secretary of the Department of Public Instruction has again been postponed. For the postponement the Government may be supposed to have their reasons, but it is to be hoped that they are reasons which will commend themselves to the public. It will be difficult for people generally to see why, if the acting Under-Secretary is to be made permanent Under-Secretary, he should not be appointed at once; why, if someone else is to be appointed, the appointment is not made. The position in question is certainly not one that ought to be left vacant very long.

and practically it is now 12 months or more since the vacancy took place. During that time there have been no less than three Ministers at the Education Office, and to say the least two of them the work of the office was almost entirely new. During the four years that the Act has been in operation, we have had altogether no less than five Ministers in charge of the Education Department. In the matter of Ministerial changes the customs in the mother country differ very widely from our own. There has only been one Ministerial change in England during the last 10 years, and consequently there have not been more than two vice-presidents of the Council. The result of these less frequent changes is that those members of the Government who have charge of important Departments get time to study the subject with the wants, and to completely identify themselves with their interests. A Postmaster-General like Mr. FAWCETT gets time to work reforms, as well as to make them. And if it is difficult to think of the English General Post Office without thinking of Mr. FAWCETT, the name of Mr. MUNDELLA has come to be almost inseparable from that of the English Education Department in the colonies, however, reputations like these are not common. If the men are not different the circumstances are. In our own Education Department, the Minister that comes to-day goes to-morrow. In some instances the Minister himself is as new to the subject as he is to the Department. Other men may be chosen because they have some special aptitude for their position; but in many

it might almost be said in the majority instances, our Ministers of Education are elected quite as much for political as for educational reasons. About the only special qualification to be hoped for is that they will take to the work and show themselves willing to learn. If we change Ministers in the future as frequently as we have changed them in the past, and there is no reason to believe that we shall not, our Ministers of Education, however able they may be, will lack the experience which is necessary to self-reliance. For purposes of information and for those of action, they must to a small extent rely upon their officers, and especially upon their Under-Secretary.

Not only must the Under-Secretary be the Minister's right hand-man, but in many respects the duties of the Under-Secretary of the Education Department are more delicate and difficult than those of any other Department. It will be impossible for future Ministers to master the ramifications of an Education Department like ours. Whether he likes it or not, he will find it necessary to trust to the knowledge and to the prudence of the officer who is next in command. The documents with which the public is kept familiar by the workings of the Department will have to be prepared by the Under-Secretary, or under his auspices, and much of the interviewing of the Department must of necessity be left to him. Like the rest of the Government, the occupant of the Education Office, as such he must spend much of his time in the House and be prepared to lend an attentive ear to the importunities of members. The danger that might arise out of the new state of things was predicted, and it has not been proved to be an imaginary one. In some respects the country lost much when it parted with the Council of Education. The Council had its faults. It was sometimes complained that it was characterised by too much conservatism and too little energy, but as a rule it consisted of strong men and of men who had learnt by experience. It was necessary that instead of a Council there should be a Minister; but those who have looked most closely into our educational affairs will agree that the last to say in respect of the change has been in all respects for the better.

Some of the recent work of the Department has been fairly open to criticism, and it would not be difficult to point to matters which urgently demand improvement. The last annual report of the Department, for example, was one of the most ever issued. There is more than one direction in which reform has been promised, but in which it has not been forthcoming.

The events of the last few days have been sufficient to show that the MINISTER FOR PUBLIC INSTRUCTION is the one member of the Government that needs a strong lieutenant. If our education system is to be permanently improved, the Department must have a permanent head, and to keep him from going wrong. The man who occupies this position should of course be thoroughly familiar with our own system, but he ought also to know something of the systems of other countries. If we get first-class men to preside over individual schools, and to take the leading positions in our Universities, we ought not to set an inferior man to preside over the large and complicated machinery which our Education Department is putting together. Some of the ablest men in the mother country have been employed as inspectors, and in a new country the selection of thoroughly qualified men for the more prominent posts is, if possible, a matter of greater importance than it is in an old one. After all, it is less upon the system that we have to depend than upon the men who work it. To a very large extent it is the men who will make the system, and it is the men who occupy the higher positions who will mould those who will occupy the lower ones. The appointment of a weak Under-Secretary would be a calamity. Of that the Minister himself must be satisfied, but as yet the public has not had any very distinct proof of the fact. If any efforts have been made to get a strong man to fill Mr. WILKINS' place, so much has not been announced. Of those who are supposed to be candidates for the position, it is not necessary to say anything. For aught we know, they may be all that the Department wants; but the Government should understand that unless it appoints a man not only of experience and ability, but also of special knowledge, to the vacant post, it will make a serious mistake.

Under the title of "State-aid and State Interference," Mr. GEORGE HADEN-POWELL, a political economist whose writings are familiar to readers of the leading English magazines and reviews, has republished some of his fugitive papers in a permanent form, together with other matter, and so produced a volume well worthy of study wherever the question of State-aid to, and State interference with, commerce and industry still remains to be argued. And where does it not? Mr. POWELL writes for Englishmen under a doubt whether the controversy has been finally settled for them; but if the persistent defence of sound economic principle be desirable in the country where its greatest victories have been won, there must be a more urgent need of such advocacy where amongst the conditions of society there is a special tendency towards that excessive reliance upon the State from which protection and other similar schemes for stimulating private enterprise take their rise. Mr. POWELL does not deny that the State can aid private enterprise and industry; but his contention is that the aid is to be rendered by abolishing or removing obstacles that stand in the way of their free course and development. To go beyond that is to interfere with their growth, and, on a broad view of the case, to retard it. In communities where the Government is expected at many points to think and act for the people there is always a current of feeling, of greater or smaller volume and force, in favour of such interference. The protection of native industry by heavy customs duties, the fostering of private undertakings by bonuses or special rewards, are not unreasonably to be looked for as only further developments of that paternalism which relieves the people of the trouble of satisfying their local wants and guarding by the State their private interests. Where much is done for the people, more is likely to be required. Sir HENRY PAULS said the other day, at the Cobden Club, that there was no depth of feeling in Australia in favour of a protective policy. Without disputing Sir HENRY'S sagacity, it may be said that it would be a grave error to presume too much upon the soundness of his view in this matter.

The principles for which Mr. POWELL contends are, as he says, "illustrated" by results in commerce and industry. As he remarks in another place, "the abstract principles of political economy are nothing more nor less than logical explanations of successful human conduct." Ask political economists, "What is the cause of manufacturing prosperity?" It will reply—Take any case of manufacturing prosperity, and you will find you have a community enjoying as much as, or perhaps more than, its possible rivals a favourable climate, skill in the people, energy in the people, an adequate command of raw material, and liberty to utilise all these conditions. Free trade does not cause it, protection does not cause it, for it is nothing more nor less than the realised co-existence of several conditions, each one of which can be analysed to exist in all cases of manufacturing prosperity. In comparing results, therefore, it is always necessary to inquire into conditions. Comparisons between countries governed respectively by free trade and by protection will be of doubtful value where this rule is not observed. The weight of Mr. POWELL'S chapter wherein he contrasts the progress of New South Wales with that of Victoria during the decade 1870-80 is somewhat reduced by an insufficient allowance for some of the special conditions that prevailed. It was not free trade or protection only that constituted the difference between the conditions of the two colonies. New South Wales was pushed ahead in no inconsiderable degree by the growth of public expenditure, resulting from the flooding of the Treasury with the proceeds of forest land sales, and by the diversion of trade from Melbourne to Sydney through the extension of the Southern and Western railways.

Admitting so much, the comparison, as made by Mr. POWELL, is immensely to the disadvantage of Victoria at every point. It is also said that if there has in both colonies, instead of in one only, been State interference with the natural course of private enterprise, it is natural in Victoria the less effective form. But the facts and figures of this comparison have been extensively quoted, are well known to many readers, and may be passed by here without further comment.

Mr. POWELL has an interesting chapter on protection in the United States, in which an old argument, that the prosperity of the States is the result of free trade far more than of protection, is put with much clearness and force. Amongst the conditions which have contributed to the prosperity of the great Republic, none, probably, is greater than the maintenance of absolute free trade between State and State. The area occupied equals Europe in extent. The population represents one-seventh of that of Europe, and that population, spread over a territory distinguished as much by the variety as the abundance of its resources, enjoys the advantage of absolutely free interchange. Let us imagine equal freedom prevailing amongst the countries of Europe. Would Europe lose or gain by the change? Would the States of the American Union gain or lose by setting up between themselves the barriers which separate country from country in the old world? Compared with the effects of this free interchange upon the general welfare, the influence of protection, which primarily affects an import trade of only 42 per cent, must be, as Mr. POWELL contends, insignificant. But there is also the export trade to be considered; and whilst 50 per cent of this consists of food supplies for Europe, the rest is made up of cotton, minerals, and other raw materials. Thus at least 80 per cent of the exports owe nothing whatever to protection. With an extensive export trade in food and raw materials, and with a flourishing internal trade in the interchange of varied products for the home markets, prosperity in the United States is not a thing to be wondered at. But, says Mr. POWELL, "Protection in the United States occupies an altogether subordinate position as a direct factor for or against this prosperity, and there is force enough at the present in the development of the splendid virgin resources of this partially-peopled free-trade continent to induce prosperity in spite of, but not in consequence of, protection." While unprotected industries make up four-fifths of the exports which the Union sends abroad, protected manufactures provide employment for only one-tenth of the population.

The half-yearly examinations for admission to High Schools have been held, with results not so encouraging as had been hoped. And hereupon an intimation has been given that unless better records appear in future some of the country schools will have to be discontinued. This may be meant only as an admonition to any whom it may concern; for it would be premature at this stage to put these schools aside for the cause named. The time for a fair trial has not been sufficient, and if it had been, why should the schools be closed? Is it better to fall back on the Primary school, or to encourage the youth of the country to aspire to prepare themselves for the benefit and enjoyment of the privileges which these schools offer them? The aim certainly should be to level up rather than down. In the State of Massachusetts, as we pointed out the other day, schools of this class are maintained within reach of 98 per cent of the entire population. Every town of 500 families is compelled to maintain a high school, and in towns smaller than that voluntarily support their High schools. It is now intimated that Maitland, Goulburn, and Bathurst cannot supply pupils enough to keep open doors. The reason for this may be that in these places there are good middle-class schools, and also that some of their youth are being educated in Sydney. In other words, the public High school has not yet reached a normal state. Should private schools continue to flourish, and they ought to, there still should be coming from primary schools many children for whose behoof the High schools have been opened. And these should come in numbers sufficient to form fairly strong provincial institutions. The Department has a right, if it so pleases, to hold up the rod and to threaten the closing of a school; but would it not be better policy to try the effect of other measures? Having at present cost of time and money got our education affairs to move forward, no excuse can be accepted for allowing them to drift backward. At this moment one of the bitterest complaints made in some places, and made justly, is that quantity rather than quality is being sought for. If a school is crowded, the judgment of onlookers is that it must be procured. Quantity is important, so is quality. The University would have been closed years ago if numbers had been the only test of success. It may be as well to wait and see what is the quality of the work done by High schools before, because of paucity of numbers, they are closed.

Still more ominous and unsatisfactory is the report of the alleged smallpox cases in Melbourne, and though the doctors still differ on the matter, the laymen in authority are evidently preparing for an outbreak. A resident physician of the Melbourne Hospital has been despatched to take care of the Williamstown sanatorium, and a start has been made in converting the tents into comfortable cottages. Nor are these steps taken without good reason. One man, it will be remembered, has already died of the disease, several others have been attacked, and the latest case has developed umbilical pustules, held generally to be indicative of smallpox. If it were in New South Wales we should probably conclude at once that it was smallpox and take active measures for its eradication. Such an acknowledgment in Victoria, however, would involve confession of a previous error, and therefore will only with the utmost reluctance and upon indisputable evidence be made. It is not clear whence these alleged smallpox cases came, but it is certain that they follow most inconveniently close to what our medical authorities consider the premature release of the Home passengers. The Melbourne writer was that the period of incubation of the smallpox germs was fourteen days; that isolation on board a ship was practicable, and that such isolation was effected in the case of Miss KIRKWOOD. Accordingly fourteen days after the isolation had been accomplished the passengers were liberated. Holding discretion to be the better part of medicine, of course, Dr. MACLELLAN, acting in the best interests of the people of this colony, detained the passengers sent on to Sydney for twenty-one days; and though he may not say because this is certainly appears to be in some measure attributable to this that New South Wales has so far escaped a visitation of smallpox which Victoria is enduring. The matter which most vitally concerns us, however, is the alarming proximity of the disease. If smallpox is in Melbourne at any day of the year, it is in Sydney the next day, and the intercolonial steamers three or four days a week, we are open to infection as if the disease were already in our territory, and are thus in the awkward predicament of having taken elaborate precautions, and still incurred risk, though the likelihood of catching the disease is surely a lesser matter, both as to the advisability of establishing a federal system of quarantine, and of basing that quarantine upon the understanding that precaution must begin upon the most remote edge of possibility.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

According to our cablegrams of this morning the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Right Hon. H. C. O. Childers, has promised to consult Lord Salisbury respecting the facilities for investing Chancery funds in Colonial Government securities. The Merchant Shipping Bill has been withdrawn in the House of Commons by Sir Joseph Chamberlain, who had charge of it. Probably this step was taken in view of an early vote of the present session of the Imperial Parliament. The bill for reviving the French Constitution, and curtailing the powers of the Senate in regard to money bills, has passed both chambers. With regard to the Chinese difficulty, the French Premier has explained that the Chinese Government have not yet decided responsibility for the recent attack upon French troops in Tonkin, but had admitted that they had ordered the retention of the stronghold of Lang Son on the ground that it was essential for the safety of French possessions of a defensive treaty, in regard to which that recently signed was only preliminary.

The P. and O. Company's steamer Sully with the English mails is expected to arrive in Hobson's Bay about 7 o'clock on Sunday morning, and arrangements will be made by the Post Office authorities of this colony to have the steamer Sydney proceed from Melbourne to Albany, so that it may come on from Albany by the ordinary train on Sunday afternoon, and reach Sydney in time for delivery on Monday morning.

Another proof was given yesterday of the utility of the Friday sittings of the Legislative Assembly. When the House met at half-past four on Sunday, about 40 members present, no doubt in consequence of the fact that the adjourned debate on the second reading of the Licensing Bill was the first order of the day. Some preliminary business was transacted. Leave was given to go into Committee of the Whole on Tuesday to consider the expediency of bringing in a bill to enable Municipal Councils to establish gas works. Mr. ABRAHAM resumed the debate on the Licensing Bill, but failed to secure an attentive audience, for attention was repeatedly called to the state of the House, and at length, shortly after the adjournment for refreshment the House was closed.

Some interesting information was given to the Assembly last evening by Mr. DIBB regarding the issue of a railway pass. Mr. Hugh Taylor, pursuant to notice, asked the Acting-Minister for Works if a letter was received from Mr. R. G. Lumscombe, M.L.A., on or about the 1st instant, stating that Mr. Richardson was certain to be present at the meeting of the committee on the 1st, and that a railway pass should be forwarded to Mr. Richardson, or a telegram sent to the station-master to travel free. Mr. DIBB stated that such a letter was received, and a pass was issued, but it was not sent to Mr. Richardson, or made out in Mr. Richardson's name. It was issued to the station-master, Bathurst, and forwarded to the station-master, Bathurst, who delivered it to Mr. Louis Lloyd when the result of the election was known.

In consequence of the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Dangar v. Nicholls, Mr. Farnell yesterday introduced into the Legislative Assembly a bill to define the expediency of bringing in a bill to purchase in certain cases. The preamble runs as follows:—Whereas doubts have arisen on the construction of the Crown Lands Alienation Act of 1861 and the Lands Act Amendment Act, 1875, whether, after the commencement of the last-mentioned Act, the right to make conditional purchases of Crown land was limited to conditional purchases of Crown land exceeding 260 acres, and their legal aliases and to holders in fee simple of lands granted by the Crown not exceeding the aforesaid area; and it is expedient to remove such doubts: Do it therefore enacted, &c. The enacting clause runs thus:—From and after the tenth day of August in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-five, the term twenty-one of the Crown Lands Alienation Act of 1861 shall be read as if, wherever the words "two hundred and eighty acres" or "two hundred and eighty acres" are substituted for the words "two hundred and eighty acres" and "six hundred and forty" shall be substituted for the words "two hundred and eighty" and "three hundred and twenty" respectively. But nothing in this section contained shall refer to applications made prior to the said day of August.

This answer given in the Legislative Council on Wednesday by the Hon. James Norton, to a question put by Mr. Fiddington in regard to a recent reduction made by the Victorian Post Office in the rate of postage charged on books and newspapers, is, it has been pointed out to us, liable to be misunderstood. Mr. Norton's answer was to the effect that he would be prepared, on receipt of a further communication from Victoria, to recommend immediate action with a view to placing the bookshelves of New South Wales in the same position as those of Victoria. It is needless to say that this object can be effected otherwise than by reducing the rate to one shilling.

Mr. Farnell (Hon. Alexander Stuart), Sir Patrick Jennings, and Mr. G. E. Ouse (members for the Bogong), and Mr. J. Barnett (Colonial Architect), left Sydney at half-past 9 o'clock last night by special train for Dubbo. The party were accompanied by Messrs. J. See, Alexander Wilson, and T. M. Slatery, M.L.A. The object of the visit was to inspect the proposed site for a new position for new public buildings, the money for which was voted by the Legislature some two years ago.

We understand that the Government contemplate bringing in an act and the system of sending delayed telegrams at a reduced rate. The system has not been a success, and is regarded as a practice which ought to be discontinued.

Mr. E. C. CRACKNELL, Superintendent of Telegraphs, has designed an improved plan for carrying telegraph and telephone wires through cities, and the Government have approved of the design, and accepted a tender from Messrs. D. and W. Robertson for the supply of the material, necessary for testing the value of the design in Sydney. All over the world a difficulty has been experienced in finding some method of getting rid of the overhead wires. The underground system is considered a failure because of the necessity to be constantly breaking up the streets, and interfering with water and gas pipes to make a connection for telephone wires, and the overhead wires become so numerous, and cumberous, that it is almost impossible to add to their number, however important the addition may be. As the wires on the telegraph posts in Sydney are now very numerous, and the necessity to adopt some other method of carrying the wires very urgent, Mr. Cracknell has devised a scheme by which the wires can be bunched together in cables. The plan consists of erecting an ornamental frieze on cast-iron standards, cable racks being fixed at the rear of the frieze as places in which the cables may rest. Each cable will contain 50 wires, and in the design for which a tender has been accepted racks are provided for 400 wires. The number of racks, however, may be increased indefinitely. When, in the erection of the frieze and standards, the intersection of a street is met with, the cables will be carried through underground pipes below the gas, water, and sewerage, and a plan will be adopted by means of an electric wire to enable the officials of the Telegraph Department at any time that it is necessary, to have new cables drawn into the underground pipes at the intersection of streets. None of the wires will be seen from the streets, because, though overhead, except where the streets intersect each other, they will be together in cables which will be in a main behind the frieze, and this arrangement is particularly suitable for telephone wires, as branch wires or lines can be very easily attached without any disturbance of the streets or pavements, as would be the case if an underground system were chosen. The frieze and standards can be erected in a comparatively short time, and there is little doubt that the scheme will be the means of beautifying the streets by doing away with the ragged awnings which in many places at present disfigure the city. In this respect the Municipal Council are giving their assistance, for they have highly approved of the design, and the Government are carrying it out. The scheme will also be of advantage to the fire brigades. At present the brigades complain very bitterly of the difficulty they have to contend against, in consequence of the multiplicity of wires on the telegraph posts, when getting fire escapes to houses, or when they are sent to extinguish fires.
